In first line of the first chapter Ruth declares, "I'm dead." At this point, in the 1980s, it's been almost fifty years since she's seen or talked to one of her relatives. She's dead to her parents and siblings, and her family may as well be dead to her.	1	2	3	4	5
Ruth tells her son James that her family would not have put up with being interviewed. She suspects her father would "have a heart attack" if he saw her mixed-race son.	1	2	3	4	5
Ruth gives a short history of her life: she was born an Orthodox Jew in Poland in 1921. Her name was originally Ruchel Dwarja Zylska, but when her family immigrated to the United States a few years later it was changed to the Americanized Rachel Deborah Shilsky, and when she left Virginia in 1941 she changed	1	2	3	4	5

1	2	3	4	5	This chapter, like every odd-numbered chapter except for Chapter 25, is told from the point of view of Ruth, who is telling James her life story. We will later learn that this is the first time she's revisited her past since she left her family back in 1941, closing the door on her mother, father, sister, brother, and a version of herself.
1	2	3	4	5	Although Ruth's father faced anti-Semitic discrimination, he feels no empathy for African Americans, who he happily discriminates against.
